As the resolution has not been seconded there is no motion now before this Council, and if I move us a motion that which Lintended to move at amendment I should have to ask leave to do so without giving notice. In order that the hou, member may not think that a matter to which he has probably devoted some time has not been thought of and discussed, if hon, members wish me to move on this subject without notice I will do so, but if they do not wish it I will not and urgent circumstances would justify its redo so. THE CONQUEST OF OLD CANTON.

Chan to, Pripos of Southern Ynch, was a native of Chon ling (modern Chih.ll.) Whan (B.C. 2:1) the Ta'in power took possession of the emp re and bad reduced Yang yiloh, a division of Yang-obon, to something like order, the three governments of Kwel-Iln, Nan-hai, and Sikar were established, and, besides organised amigrants, the criminal classes were sent to live amongst the Yileh.

Thus matters went on for thirteen years, until the Second Emperor's time B.O. 200, when the Administrator of Nan-hai, named Son-hiau, was taken ill. (Beo Mayers' Manual. Successor in B.C. 215 to Tusui, who had been sent with a flact of double decked ships to conguer the country of Yush. According to Mayers. Thus troops were defeated by the aborigines near Conton in B.C. 218, when the Wei or "Administrator" himself was slain. He moved 500 000 colonists from the north into Yueb, which fact accounts for much that we still observe in the language of Canton.) On the point of death, he summoned before him Chau-to, the district governor of Lung-ch'wan, or Sun-chon, in Hui-chou Fu, and a dressed him in the following terms:-" I hear-"that Ch'en-share and others are in open re-"volt, and that all the great mon are rebelling "against Te'in. each playing for his own hand; "Nan-hal is an out-of-the-way and remote spot, "and I fear will become a proy to bandit "soldiers. I should like to raise troops and "out off the new road, i.e. communication with "Ts'in, holding myself in coadiness for any result "that may follow the fendal princes' revolt. But "I am very sick. Again, Pan-ya Nau-hai and "Pan-vii still form the two prefectural districts "of Canton fu city] is defended by mountain "passes and we cover an area of several thousand " K north, south, east, and west, with a large "number of Chinese to assist us. This is, in "fict, a margravate, and might become a state. | minister the affairs of the Nan-hai wei or sub-After Hisn's death. To forthwith sent military orders to Heng P'u, Yang-shin, and the Hwang-k'i pass, running: "Baudit soldiers are "about to come; at one out off the road; assemble i "troops, and protect yourselves." Then he gradually managed to put the Ta'in officials out of the way, and appointed prefects and magistrates

And he forthwith did confer upon T'o (usually

known as the Wes. To written authority to ad-from his own creatures. The l's'in power having thus been extinguished. I'o fo thwith attacked and annexed Kweilin and Stang (Kwing-stand the rest of Kwangtung) and a t himself up as Martial King of Southern Yüsh. When the Emperor Kan (of the Han dynasty) had subdued the empire, he left To alone, and did not chastise him, as besaw that Ch na was already over exhausted with wars. In his eleventh year (B.C. 196) he despatched

Lub Kin to appoint T'd as King of Southern Yash, and furnish him with a split tally for the new of his envoye, so that he might consolidate the bundled Yush, and present them from bring a trouble to the southern frontiers: his frontiers joined ours at Chang-sha (Hu Nan). During the reign of the Empress Kan, the Emperor's widow, nee Lu, the Government recommend d that trade in iron implements on th

Yuch frontier be put a stop to. To observed: "When His Majesty the Emperor Kan es-"tablished himself, envoys and objects generally "passed freely between us; but now the Em-"bres Kan lends an ear to alanderous states-"men, and makes invidious distinctions touching "the barbarians of the south, cutting off "our supply of atensils and implements. This "must be a scheme of the Prince of Chang-'province or apparage embracing most of Hu "name was Wn Suil-to exitinguish Nan-hai, "and to annex it to his own kingdom for his "particular glory." And so To proceeded to and himself the Martial Emperor of the South. (To this day the Kings of Annam style them. selves Emperors of the "Great South,)" He sent troops to attack the Ch'ang-sha frontier, and took several districts. The Empress Kan sent the General, the Marquis Tean of Lung-lii (sarnamed Chou) to give battle; but her men soffered much sickness from the heat and damp, and were muchle to cross the range. FETTERS OF FIRE. BY COMPTON READE, A OTHER OF "TAKE CARE WHOM YOU TRUST,"

"UNDER WHICH KING?" "HARD LINES," &C. Anto First Publishen PROLOGUE.

The South Durham forhounds had started a time dug-fox one dull November afternoon, and the hunt followed its lead at a rattling pace. That coming quarry knew the country better than the dors themselves. He had been unearthed in the rough covers between Redmarshall and Long Newton, and his game was to make for the Toes, which river native instinct told him the fine gentlemen in pink and the roughs on their ragged Rosinantes, not to mention the hounds, would hardly care to cross. He bad plenty of pace in him, had that gallant old dogfor and his chances would have been average but for the villainous low hedges, some of them not a foot high, which protect the inferior horseman from mishaps, and expedite the running. Away helter skelter tripped the noble vermin. careful to keep a clear field between bimself and the hounds, but running straight as an arrow The ground, for the most part under tillage, is the stiffest clay in all creation; the roads, bar the main between Stockton and Darlington, resemble aungmires; and honce ore ever he reached Elton: Master Reynard had improved his distance. The huntsman guessed as much, for he forced the pace, and the best mounted nien had some trauble to keep up with him. Not so, how? ever, a gentleman in a plain black coat, who rode a splendid thorough bred bay, and seemed to be a stranger, in smuch as the tykes of Durham and the North Ri ing in his roar rogarded sentiment merged in sheer astonishment whenor no conceivable reason, he abruntly relacd in his steed, allowing the entire field to pass.

The beautiful bay, however, entirely disapproved the notion of being out of the haut Pightly curbed he could not break away, but for all that champed his bit angrily, and the Enghad hanguage being understanded only in its numerous explotives by the equine car, failed to grasp the rationals of his rider's apparent in-

" Bah!" solilog gised that gentleman, "They'll tear vonder gallant for to shrols without mercy; and more shame to them. What business have I done cette gatere? What find tempted me filthy nond. Ugh! this time morning to join in their pitiful sport? The old Adam. I suppose, or rather the old stupid dovil of ornel callonsness we have been solutionally cultivating since the world began So he, steady, my boy!" for the bay showed signs of having his way for once, not being nersonally prejudiced against sport Matter, however, had to yield to mind, and his test to subside jute a walk. Then his master took l out a cigar, and, letting the r ins fall, prepared At that instant the bray of the huntsman's horn on the outskirt of Elton Coppice rang in the unimal's cars, and the "Hark forward!" if conveyed to his eager mind was just too much for equine endurance. With a mighty bound ke broke clear away, ere ever the loose rouse could be collected, and with the bit between his teef cleared the hodge and galloped like a mad thing

Radinarshall to Yarm-on-Tees. Already he was beginning to feel the sharp agony of the curb when, as ill-luck would have it, his off foot stepped into a hole half-a-yard deep, and be pitched forward, flinging his rider head foremost on the hard rough road.

The man lay there prope, bleeding, sinned I've horse extricating his broken log struggled for a little, then rolled helplessly by the lan side. Not a human soul was nigh at hand The motley hard of houwerkers out of employ and rural yokels had laboured onward in the trail of the bust. Ten minutes before field and follow were all aswarm with homenity Now the scene strotched for a long square mil at desolate. The nearest habitation was Ellis Roctory, and that lies to the west, mearly half Something ligs than five minutes had-elapsed when along the main read from Darlington came limping an elderly man. His figure loomed creat and soldier-like, but his eye rolled wildly and the expression of his face resembled that of a wolf at leav. Trange abound in these regions, and especially between the large industrial contres. This wayfarer, however, bere a rather different stamp from the minimon vagrant. True, there were points of similarity-books in boles, clothes both soiled and forn, and an absence of und rlinen. Moreover, his long, from grey hair. dishevelled and matted, gave the man a weird appearance, and his checks were hallowed as to long fasting. But there was no dirt about his face or bare nack, and his strong bands had evident y been onite unaconstomed to manual fuil At first sight one would have been inclined to class him under a different category from that of ordinary mortids, and perhaps might have surmised that something was a misswith his brain. At the point where the aforesaid lane bi-cuts the turnpike road, this strange individual pan ed to gaze with a rueful expression at the fag end of the bunt weading its way towards the Tres Red coats dotted hither and thither over the scene brightened the stygion gloom of Darham morrow morning. But how?" November, relieving the land its if of something of its agliness. The distant oru foobroke the stillness of the day, which was of the west seemed to scorn.
